Royal Fairy Tales and Hibernian Tales also contained genuine folk-tales, and attracted Thackeray's attention in his Irish Sketch-Book. The Irish Grimm, however, was Patrick Kennedy, a Dublin bookseller, who believed in fairies, and in five years -71 printed about folk- and hero-tales and drolls classes 2, 3, and 4 above in his Legendary Fictions of the Irish Celts, Fireside Stories of Ireland, and Bardic Stories of Ireland; all three are now unfortunately out of print. More recently two collectors have published stories gathered from peasants of the West and North who can only speak Gaelic.
