The centrepiece of the Festival was a major exhibition on the South Bank of the Thames in London housed in various purpose-built structures, the whole architectural development under the direction of Hugh Casson. The Festival was a reminder of British greatness on its own terms, empire or not. Loading comments... Trouble loading?

Structurally speaking, the housing in the Live Architecture Exhibition was South Bank of the Thames, near Waterloo Bridge, was chosen as the principal site for the Festival events and exhibits, primarily because it had been aggressively bombed and then abandoned during the war.
